THE PORTAL.

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON possesses exceptional advantages as a location for a law school. The great Congressional and Law Libraries, the sittings of the Supreme Court of the United States and other national and international tribunals, afford inestimable and unique advantages for study, research, and culture. Men of the greatest attainments, with the largest experience in the legal profession and public service, occupying the most honorable official positions, are available as lecturers and professors; their interest in legal education makes it possible for this University to form a Faculty in both of its Schools of Law unequalled in personnel in the United States.

LAW SCHOOL.

The Columbian University established its Law School in 1865, and the history of the school has been one of steady growth in the number of students, Faculty, and quality of work. In 1898 the Board of Trustees extended the course for the Bachelor's degree to three years, enlarged the Faculty, increased the subjects of study, and greatly improved the methods of the work. The result has been that the first-year class in the three years' course is equal in number to any class in the history of the school.

SCHOOL OF COMPARATIVE JURISPRUDENCE AND DIPLOMACY.

In June, 1898, the Board of Trustees of the University established this department as a post-graduate school. The work was organized during the summer of 1898, a Faculty secured, the courses of study outlined, and the school opened November 15, 1898, with ninety students. The purpose of this school is threefold: (1) A course of one year in the higher studies of law, leading to the degree of Master of Laws; (2) A two years' course including the history of law and the study of comparative jurisprudence, with political and diplomatic history, leading to the degree of Doctor of Civil Law; and (3) A course in diplomacy, public finance, and international trade, leading to the degree of Master of Diplomacy, and fitting men for the diplomatic and public service of the United States.

LAW LECTURE HALL.

In 1898 the University erected a new building, known as Law Lecture Hall, on H street, adjoining the University building at the corner of Fifteenth street, and the building was dedicated January 3, 1899. The appointments and furnishings of this building are thoroughly modern and complete, and it is devoted exclusively to the work of the Schools of Law. The building is constructed of light gray brick, with stone and terra-cotta trimmings, and has a pleasing exterior, the chief feature of which is the porch, with polished granite columns. Passing through this porch, one enters a spacious lobby, with tiled floor, on either side of which are the handsome offices of the Deans of the two Schools of Law and the office of the Secretary. From the lobby one enters directly the main lecture hall, known as "Jurisprudence Hall." This room is an ideal auditorium, and seats about three hundred. The seats are arranged in the form of an amphitheater, around a handsome lecture platform, and all seats are equally desirable. One hundred and fourteen incandescent electric lights in the ceiling distribute a pleasing and uniform light over the room. Just back of the lecture platform are two windows of opalescent glass, specially designed for the Hall.

The second floor of the building is reached by an easy staircase of iron and slate. Upon this floor are the President's room, the Faculty room, and two lecture halls, accommodating one hundred and fifty students each. All of the lecture halls are furnished with comfortable opera chairs, having adjustable writing tablets attached.

The third floor has a Reception Hall, designed as a conversation room, and two court-rooms.

An important part of the work in the Law School is the Moot Court practice, by means of which a student is made thoroughly acquainted with pleading, evidence, and judicial procedure.

Probably the most attractive feature of the whole building is the Library, which occupies one-half of the third story. In every appointment it is as complete as modern art could make it. The room is thirty by sixty feet; is lighted by six large windows and a center skylight by day, and by a large number of ceiling and side-bracket incandescent electric lights at night. It is furnished with handsome, specially designed oak tables, comfortable chairs, seating ninety students, with ample table space. A spacious open fireplace gives a cheerful, cozy appearance to the room, and handsome paintings adorn the walls.

With these facilities, study is pleasant and the students are inspired to do the very best work of which they are capable.

Information concerning the Schools of Law and forms of applications for admission will be furnished by the Secretary of the Schools of Law, 1420 H street, Washington, D. C.
